SQ1: Substantial Subgroup Boundary Conditions

Formal Abstract:

Under a set of predefined conditions where one subgroup is infiltrated by another, a one-to-one join can be possible between two elements contained within. However, despite the possibility of the join, the actual coupling of the elements is not always observed within nature. Within a subgroup, certain boundary elements are present to prevent interaction. An examination of the possibility of a coupling is presented using random sampling techniques and frequency analysis. It was concluded that a possible breach is likely within 57% of elements present.

Background Information

Upon the contemplation of a committee meeting and entertainment for ATC, the short film Lone Star State of Mind [1] was discussed as a possible choice. One member of ATC having already examined the film, brought up a dilemma presented to the cast of the movie. Main character Earl (Joshua Jackson) is in a physical relationship with his attractive step-sister Baby (Jaime King). This presented a moral discussion within a fraction of the ATC development crew on the moral implications. More precisely, would a person, under normal conditions, engage in such a relationship. Having little luck through discussion with a complete ATC night joint discussion, it was decided to present the question to a random sampling of individuals to determine if such a relationship is acceptable. A question was developed.

Question Definition

If you had a really hot step-sister, would you sleep with her considering if you had no other relationship ties? (1)

The question was further amended from 'step-sister' to 'step-sibling' as certain members of the polled community rejected the question from possible same-sex relationships. Results were tallied.

Results

A response of 23 individuals responded in written correspondence with serious answers to this boundary condition problem. Of the 23 participating individuals, 14 were males and 9 were female. Note the use of past tense: as they may no longer be their recorded sex. Sexual orientation, race, age, or location was not recorded.

After many arduous hours of data analysis, the results showed an inclination that the boundary separating elements within a subgroup may be removed under the sheets (Figure 1). This is more so the case, if discretion is used from other members of the subgroup.

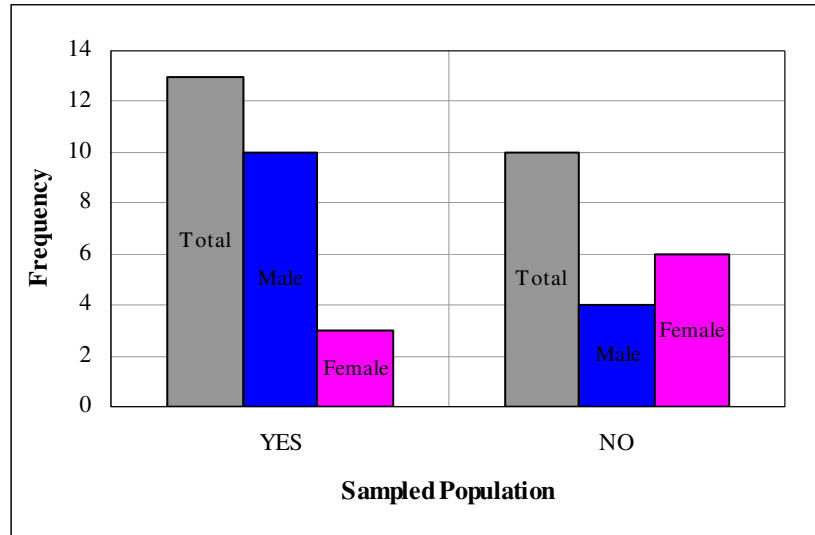

Figure 1. Results of Attractive Forces on the Breach of Boundary Layers within a Subgroup. 57% of individuals would breach the boundary separating two elements within a subgroup given enough attractive force.

Of the total population, 57% (13) would agree that sleeping with a step-sibling is morally correct given a physical attraction. Of the 14 males surveyed, 71% (10) felt this breach was acceptable. The female members were not as responsive. Only 33% (3) felt this sort of relationship was alright.

Discussion

Are there possible reasons that males would more likely chose to break this boundary? Is it because males are generally destructive creatures and this boundary should be destroyed? Is it because the reason to break this boundary is defined by different underlying thoughts (Figure 2)? Is the data presented not representative of the population represented? Perhaps the females voted 'no' more often because the question lacked to state the step-brother was a computer science major and would make six figures within two years? The world may never know.

Conclusions

There are more people that voted yes (sister-fuckers) than voted no (the non-kinky people).

Comments

Everyone who responded to the question also gave a comment or a reason. This was not required, but it added in the enjoyment of the poll. These comments are presented below.

Comments of ‘Yes’ Votes

It’s cheap and convenient. I hope her family is loaded! – male

Where’s your sense of adventure? My dad’s wife’s daughter is my bed buddy! – male

My step-sister is hot! I don’t know... (long pause) ... Yeah ... maybe. I have a really hot step-niece that if she was my step-sister I would definitely sleep with. – male

Yeeeeeeeeee haw...Sure why not? – male

Yes, she would just be another girl who happened to be my step-sister. – male

If step-brother, I don’t see anything wrong with it. – female

Yes, if you became step-siblings during teenage years, then it has my blessing. – female

Depends on how discrete she is...if she’s going to talk about it, then no. Otherwise... – male

Prolly...given the right conditions: brand new step sister walks in the door, hot as hell and a look in her eyes that say, “Where’s your room, I need to get laid.” – male

If I was a hottie step-sister and was under the above conditions, then it’s TOTALLY different and I’d say yes. – female

Yes, if her mother was involved too – the more the merrier. That's way better than the alternative: she could be your mom. – male

Sure, not following what sparked this question, but intriguing none-the-less. – male

Yes, if 1) she has no blood relation to me, 2) she wants me, 3) nobody will ever find out, EVER, 4) she has no STDs, 5) she is of legal age. – male

Comments of 'No' votes

You can count my lack of response as a 'no'. – male

NO! That's gross, brother or sister! That's sick!! – female

Man, I don't think so... – male

I won't even date my 9th cousin, let alone a step-brother. I still would consider them family. – female

We just draughtpt it like its haught yawl, but not with a step-sister! That's just wrong. – male

Very doubtful, unless they had a large penis and were good in bed like [name omitted] – then yes! – female

Definitely no to this question, it would just be too weird. – female

No, b/c what if he was bad in the sack? You would still have to face him. – female

NO WAY!! – female

Seriously, no. Jokingly – I wouldn't sleep with her, but she could give me head. (j/k) – male
